Who sees what I type?

Lesson 4: your Card, your questions, and who is here to help.

The Card, up close

- The QR code holds a secret that lets the Card start a chat.
- The assistant keeps a scrambled copy of that secret, the Card number, the class, your teacher's name, and when the Card stops working.
- It never gets your name.
- Your teacher keeps a list of who had which Card number. That list never goes to the assistant.

A Card stops working when the time runs out, by the end of the school day at the latest, or earlier if an adult turns it off.

Who can see what

The assistant	The librarian	Your teacher's list
Your questions and its answers	Questions as they're asked, labeled "Period 3, Card 14"	Which student had Card 14
Card number, class, and your teacher's name	The answers	Nothing you typed
Not your name	Not your name, unless they ask your teacher

"The librarian" includes any staff member the librarian asks to cover. A school counselor sees a question only if the librarian asks them to help with it.

How long, and where

Deleted at the end of the school day

Two exceptions: a message an adult is following up on, and anything the law requires the school to keep.

It stays in this building

It's all on a computer here. It doesn't go to a company.

When a message worries the adults

> Sometimes people type things to a computer they wouldn't say out loud. The assistant checks every message for signs that someone could be in danger. If it finds one, it shows a message written for what you might be going through, and it lets the librarian know.

That's not to get anyone in trouble. It's because the adults here would rather know.

The honest parts

- An adult can find out who had the Card. They can ask the teacher. That happens between adults, not inside the assistant.
- An adult may check in even if the answer looked normal. Some concerns just let an adult know.
- The assistant can miss things. It's not a counselor.

> If something is wrong, talking to a person is always the better way.

Where to go

An adult here

A counselor, a teacher, or the librarian.

Call or text 988

If you feel really down or might hurt yourself. Free, any time, day or night.

Childhelp, if someone is hurting you. Call or text, any time.

In danger right now? Tell an adult near you or call 911.

Your turn: who can see it?

For each one: who can see this, and what happens next?

- A student asks for books about sharks.
- A student types their full name and address into a question.
- A student asks for books about grief because their grandpa died.
- A student types "I want to disappear" and nothing else.
- A student asks the assistant to write their whole book report.
- A student shares their Card with a friend in another class.
- It's 4 p.m. What is still saved from this morning's questions?

Before you go

- "What happens to what I type" says all of this, any time. It's linked from the Card sign-in and chat pages.
- On your handout, write one adult here you could talk to. Nobody will collect it. It's for you.
